OBJECTIONS TO ELECTRIC MOTORS. I wish to emphasize the point that the objection to using ejectric motors for driving the auxiliaries on board snip is not an objection to the use of electric motors per se, but to installing them in a location for which they are not adapted, and where their good features cannot be utilized. What has led to the wide use of electric motors on shore is het only the absence of heat, cleaniness and ease of installation and operation, but above all the simplicity of the transmission of power from a central station to a distance. Now the great ma-
